Hi Adeola,

I'd define the scorecard before any campaign work starts, because the post makes qualified leads, booked calls, clients won, and cost per acquisition the real test.

For Bazaraku, I'd make each lead pass through a simple staffing-buyer check: market, buyer role, hiring need, lead source, qualification reason, booked call status, and final outcome.

That gives an individual marketer or agency the same measuring stick. It also keeps early decisions from being driven by cheap leads in the US or Europe that never become real staffing conversations.
