Hi Aiden,

For the investing-coaching sample, I'd write two opening lines for professionals: one about inconsistent returns and one about guessing without a repeatable system. Keep the rest of the ad the same, then compare which opening gets more people to read on. That gives you a concrete way to judge the requested exercise against the problem you named before building out the full ad.

Across Elitscale's five active clients, I'd use each client's own offer and voice notes to make that same kind of focused comparison, then use opt-in, show-up, and close rates to decide what copy to revise.
